My dear Mr. Watson

One thing more I mentioned to you about this morning but it is supposed very minor at the time -

In looking over all my Sabice reticulata I notice quite a uniform difference between the Rocky Mountain plants and those from Europe - a difference which seems to result from their reaf-eration or a variety - probably I mean it resulting from some contamination - the leaves are narrower and pointed/mucronate, less reticulate and the flower is shorter.
I wonder if this will hold true of the American and would it be to stretch S. mucronata a little so as to make it a monadot or take her as a variety on the way to a reticulata? It may be very unlikely but I am writing the as long as rice &c the 14th inst. I restained on the 15th inst. in view

Yours truly

M. L. Bell,
